WEBB, ANNE, TOO SMALL FOR A COMPUTER? "Off. Meth. and Machines" (Britain), 14, No. 162, June 1967, pp. 20—27, 4 fig.

The author presents the possibility offered in Britain by the centres for electronic computing, as independent organizations, for solving various problems of enterprises for which the purchase of an electronic computer of their own is not profitable. The system of relations between the centre and the user is shown and a series of practical indications is given in view of facilitating the choice of the centre whose activity and possibilities best correspond to the requirements and conditions of the user.
